It works in Chrome fine but not in IE and Firefox. It also seems to vary between versions (IE6/IE7 and IE8, IE9 does not appear to display these colours correctly). I have a website with a banner that is just a fixed position background image, to the left and right of this image is a div, the width of which is 60%. The left one has a background colour of light blue, the right has a darker blue. Both of these colours have been applied using the # colours. This code displays the right div correctly but for some reason IE6/7/8 won't display the background colour for the left div. I have checked their documentation on exactly what format the background property should be but nothing. If I remove the background colour from the divs then it will display the background image just fine. I do not want to set the background image as the background property is a fixed position image. In FF it displays the colour correctly. Does anyone have any idea why? I just want to make sure I pass the correct format for the background property in all browsers. test NEXT

Cain and Andy is an Xbox account hacking plugin. For in-game hacking I highly recommend Cain and Andy. To install Cain and Andy, you need to use SparkPlayer. Cain and Andy's update option is disabled. You can't really say that it doesn't update.
