Of course, it also supports a batch processing of audio and video files that you can use to. is currently managing a political campaign for his re-election as a United Nations "special representative for the secretary general," and, as he won't confirm who his boss is, we're left guessing. Trying to get a fix on the source of the rumor, we hear some UN sources are convinced that when "Mr. Brown" dropped by and asked for a meeting with the president, it was to ask for a letter of support to give his campaign. "Who will give such a letter, particularly to a politically untested career UN bureaucrat?" asks an insider. Still, "Mr. Brown" is in the president's daily meeting with his foreign policy and national security team, which could help account for his invitation. "What amuses me is that the president has to go through two rounds of people to give a letter of recommendation," says a person familiar with the situation. "He has to go through Valerie Jarrett or Susan Rice or Ben Rhodes or Samantha Power. I'm sure that's the reason he gave him the letter -- to make sure he didn't ask him for something that he wouldn't have the authority to give." Which is, perhaps, a generous way of looking at a president who allegedly or maybe-probably doesn't have a role in foreign affairs. It's hard to believe that an organization created by the United States to help and foster relations with other countries would rely on a former president of the United States to promote and foster those relations, but then again, this has been the United Nations.
