Urinary tract infection in infants with Hirschsprung's disease: the role of urinary catheterization. Urinary tract infection (UTI) is considered to be the leading cause of infantile sepsis. Most of the research is focused on the use of urinary catheterization, which seems to be the main cause of UTI in infants. We assessed the incidence and characteristics of UTI in a cohort of infants with Hirschsprung's disease (HD), comparing those who received intermittent catheterization (IC) with those who did not. Two hundred and fifteen HD infants were followed for a median (range) of 21 (6-72) months. All the patients were exclusively fed by enteral route and all of them had a bowel length of Q: Scheduling a console task in Windows Server 2016 I have an application that stores an XML file and every 30 minutes it should compare this file with the previous one.
