How to Crack?The reasons for my post today are actually quite trivial – I was just passing through the terminal (not even the menu bar is working, it appears) and saw that this guy is supposed to be funny. Maybe a bit too much humor for a kindergarten teacher? What do you think? Which makes me wonder: who were these people that had to be taught how to be human? Children – I mean this literally and figuratively, because if we look at these two examples together, we see two people, Mr. Mathers and Mr. Mathers Jr., who have been children up to now. Children who are developing in the world, and who become as adults, as adults, and who look at the same world and they look at the same people as they did when they were young. This is the magical thing that happens when a human being grows up, when he/she is able to speak, and when he/she is able to put the past behind him/her. The past is not something that does not exist anymore, it just remains there, like in the air, but it is not present. The past becomes a past. And this happens every single time. We all grow up, to a certain extent, every day, or, I should say, every single day, but we are children again, every single day, and we look at the world, and we look at the people, and we look at the past, and we look at the future. We see that we are our past and our future, and we are our present. It's the best thing to look at life that way, because if we do not, if we do not look at our present, but we look at the past, or look at our future, or look at our children – we will not be able to move forward, and we will not be able to look at the new things that are happening every single day. We need to look at life that way, because it is the only way to move forward, to become better, to grow, to become human beings. If we do not move forward, if we do not grow, if we do not do all of that, then we are, in a certain way, irrelevant. And we are not irrelevant. We are our present and our future, and we are not our past. So, what are we 2d92ce491b
