Slalom Downhill It was the second day of a weekend full of family, friends, and skiing for me. On Friday, my friend and I met up for a day of SLC skiing to celebrate her last day of school. She is leaving for college this summer, so it was nice to say our goodbyes. On Saturday, I joined her friend from school for a weekend of great food, great wine, and even better skiing. Sunday was the last day of great skiing at Snow Valley. My parents and I had a blast skiing down 17 trails in 5 different runs, and in some cases, all of them.

Unfortunately, I can't post any pictures of the day because my mom forgot her camera, but it was a great time. After that day, I was craving a little bit of winter. It was winter. The temps were low. I decided to take two L & H values. The integration is the sum of all the L & H values. Why are they the same? A: The bar diagram compares $L$ and $H$ values across a set of runs. So if we see a large cluster of high bars for $L$, then we might conclude that most runs in the population are consistent with higher $$L$$ values. This is similar to an integral test for significance. Here, we expect a normal distribution of outcomes, so if we see a large number of runs in a particular bin of the distribution, then this would indicate that the outcome is probably significantly different from the expected normal distribution. By Associated Press MOSCOW — Sergei Kuznetsov died after a plane crash outside Moscow that officials say was probably caused by a bird strike. The chief of the Russian Investigative Committee, Vladimir Markin, said at a news conference Saturday that Kuznetsov, a pilot with more than 30 years experience, 2d92ce491b
