Changes in cortical excitability following stroke have been the subject of study in the field of neurology for many years. This overview will review the most recent findings of these changes, which can be measured using several different techniques. Such techniques include (1) motor evoked potentials, (2) transcranial magnetic stimulation, (3) magnetic stimulation of motor cortex and (4) transcranial current stimulation. The emphasis will be placed on the possible mechanisms that underlie these changes. In general, the findings from animal studies have led to the conclusion that there is a transient increase in cortical excitability at the acute stage of stroke and that these changes are related to the degree of tissue damage. After approximately a month the changes seem to return to normal values. At this stage there is also a correlation between the degree of stroke and the changes in cortical excitability.Q: Migrating from Netty to Jetty My app is a web server using Netty for handling requests and Jetty for serving static files. I would like to migrate from Netty to Jetty. I was hoping that if I have my Netty code as part of a Jetty-based app, it would be straightforward to convert that code to use Jetty. The only thing I've run into so far is Jetty's documentation on the http client, which talks about the code being converted, but doesn't talk about how to convert from http (non-blocking) to http (blocking) at the same time. Any advice would
