Alkaline phosphatase from Escherichia coli was overproduced by fusion with the substrate-binding domain of glucose-6-phosphate dehydrogenase from E. coli. The hybrid enzyme was partially purified from the lysate of cells expressing the hybrid protein by affinity chromatography on maltose-agarose. The purified hybrid enzyme was a mixture of phosphatase and dehydrogenase, as judged by chromatography on DEAE-cellulose. However, further purification by chromatography on phosphocellulose increased the purity of the enzyme to approximately 70%. Incubation of the hybrid enzyme with [gamma-32P]ATP indicated that more than 90% of the catalytic sites in the hybrid enzyme are occupied with cationic amino acids. The hybrid enzyme was about 300 times more specific for alkaline phosphatase than the native enzyme.Q: How to get the lowest and highest value of a column of type float? 77a5ca646e

But on the other hand, there were a couple of glitches with that application. First of all, when I updated the application, the "configure" window disappeared. Second of all, Yahoo! Chat support was missing. It took me time to search for a solution. I used the Yahoo! Chat add-on, as I knew that this add-on was a part of Y! Messenger Plus, but it didn't seem to work. I got a message from "Email support" saying that it was a known problem. So, I re-installed the "Y! Messenger Plus" and I tried to install the add-on again. It didn't work again. I used the old configuring wizard, and I re-launched the application. I went to the add-ons section and I checked the "Yahoo! Messenger" and the "Yahoo! Chat" add-ons. Everything was ok now. By the way, I know that "Yahoo! Chat" is not a real add-on, it is a part of Y! Messenger Plus. I really hope that Yahoo! will fix the two problems with this add-on.
