===== This app was made as a personal message board software for myself. As a simple way to store your messages, MsgRoll will display a list of messages on your iPhone's screen, just as you would see on the iPhone's Message screen, and allow you to quickly write new messages and scroll down to previous messages. You can also add comments and like/dislike messages from the iPhone's Message screen. Even if there are more than three messages, MsgRoll will automatically scroll the messages for you. You can also set the app to remember the last message you read. It is also possible to set the app to receive notification messages via mail or SMS. After installation, you can add or edit your information on the options screen. You can also remove the message board by accessing the Options menu. The names of the application and author are displayed on the menu bar of the Messages application. The software is 100% free and we apologize for any inconvenience caused by this. MsgRoll is currently in beta and will be released soon. Any feedback is welcomed and appreciated. A lot of applications are focused on saving time in your workday. This is the case for the MS Office documents you prepare for business presentations or school exams. But what about your day? These applications are rarely designed to be as friendly to daytime activities as they are to the office hours. Thankfully, one such program has created an innovative application for the iPhone, that will make your days more fun and productive. 3D Clocks 2 is a free application for the iPhone that provides you with your current time in a 3D interactive experience. You will be impressed when you discover what this application can do. The program takes into account the time you leave to work, and then calculates the time you have left to do your activities. This way you will find yourself left with a nice amount of time. The application allows you to change the time without having to touch your device, by rotating the clock. You can also see the date on the bottom of the screen. The interface is very simple and intuitive and has various options. But the application is also a great companion when you need to find out when something will happen. This is a good application to have on hand when you have to do something important at a particular time. 3D Clocks 2 is available in the App Store for $0.99. Nothing can prevent cyber attacks from happening, not even viruses. But what if you

Mouse Control has been around for a while, so you might think it's a bit dated. And it is. But its popularity is still quite strong, and its creators seem to be listening to user feedback. Here's the problem: You have to install Mouse Control separately, and you cannot run it alongside other mouse-enabled software like the mouse-enabled version of Internet Explorer, Photoshop, Windows Explorer, etc. If you could run Mouse Control alongside other mouse-enabled software, you could even have one instance of Mouse Control running for each program. As it is, you can only run a single instance of Mouse Control. I'm just trying to understand clojure.spec and, when to use what. To start, I'd like to understand the following: A spec has multiple specifiers: :name :ns-name :ns :symbol-name It seems to me that they should either be mutually exclusive, or that the same spec might be shared among multiple specifiers. So, is it actually possible to have two specifiers in a spec that have the same name, or does a specifier just become the name? A: The Clojure spec documentation does not specifically forbid multiple names. In the case of symbol-name you can specify a symbol that is the name of the class or namespace as one of the names (you can also specify the name of the symbol as a second name), but it doesn't mean that you can only have one symbol-name. In the case of ns-name, ns-qualifier, and ns: you can only have one ns-qualifier or one ns: if the ns-qualifier is not :top. I don't believe you can have multiple ns:, but it's not clear that you can have more than one ns-name. Bondage - Viv, Sam, Kate, and other submissives who love being in bondage!...
