That of potentially confidential documents, such as contracts, employee agreements and the like. Not that the lack of a built-in security protocol is really much of a problem, what makes this application so attractive is that it provides a solution with a really nice GUI. The application can handle most basic authentication and comes bundled with a very basic security plugin called "IMLock Enterprise" which is essentially PGP encrypted messages sent using a custom transport protocol. The base code should easily allow you to add your own transport, should you want to support more secure file transfers. IMLock Enterprise v1.0.0.32 The application is updated more often than any of the SSL-based browser add-ons, and it doesn't host any advertisements in addition to being freeware. That's not to say that it's a cheapie, but it doesn't have a bunch of annoying "bells and whistles" like most of them do. Once installed, the program should show up on the Start menu under Programs -> IMLock Enterprise. Can anyone help identify this football team playing on this video? I'm only interested in knowing which country it is played in. Any information is appreciated. A: From the obvious RTL part of the commentary, this is a play-off game between the Serie B champions of the Austrian Bundesliga, Austria Salzburg. The Austrian Bundesliga is in the third tier of footballing achievement in Austria. This season's play-off round was between 13 teams, including Salzburg. Salzburg won the game 4-1 and so qualified for the Austrian Bundesliga. The game is therefore played in Austria, and Austrian rules are in play. From the nature of the moves seen, it appears that the team in question is actually from (parts of) Germany and Austria, but Austria Salzburg is just the name of the club.
