The purpose of this study was to analyse the effect of age on major depressive disorder (MDD) treatment outcome. Patients older than 70 years (N = 308) with MDD were randomly allocated to two treatment groups. Patients in one group received nortriptyline, the other group was treated with paroxetine. The outcome of both treatment groups were compared with a group of patients younger than 70 years. All patients were assessed for response (R) (remission and partial remission) and remission (R) after 8 weeks. The older patients showed no significant difference in treatment response and remission compared to the younger patients. To our knowledge this is the first study on the age effect on the treatment outcome of depression in the elderly.Short-term (14 day) effects of exercise on cognitive recovery of healthy young adults. The purpose of the present study was to examine the effects of exercise on cognitive recovery of young adults, compared to a recovery comparison condition. In order to compare the effects of exercise with those of a recovery comparison condition, two groups of healthy participants completed a series of cognitive tasks during the course of the experiment. One group was exposed to an aerobic exercise protocol, the other group to an active recovery protocol, matched in terms of the cognitive demands of the tasks and the time commitment. The results indicated that the exercise protocol, compared to the recovery comparison condition, facilitated memory and executive control processes. Findings suggest that the importance of mental rest and recovery in this population should be reconsidered.Leveraging existing molecular and structural insights to construct dynamic models of human β -lactoglobulin folding Project Lead the Way Project Lead the Way (PLTW) is an organization that develops and implements standards-based curricula in science, technology, engineering and math (STEM) for middle and high school students. PLTW has a strong academic component where students learn in an environment that is directed toward teaching and research. Its goal is to prepare middle and high school students for higher education and the technological workforce by implementing instructional and assessment tools to facilitate student success. It is a non-profit, non-sectarian, not-for-profit corporation that is headquartered in Alexandria, Virginia.

History In 1969 under the leadership of John F. Kennedy, Jr., Project Lead the Way was founded as the National Engineering Honor Society for High School Students. A decade later in 1979, PLTW was founded as the nation's premiere organization for STEM-based college preparatory instruction for students in middle and high school. In 2000, PLTW's membership grew from 2,000 schools to more than 2,300 schools and all 50 states. At that time, it also extended its efforts to schools across the world. In 2011, the National Science Foundation supported the organization's main thrust to transform science, engineering and math instruction for today's students. Today, almost 10,000 middle school and high school students in over 400 schools attend PLTW programs. Project Lead the Way is the largest organization of its kind. Its members include more than 2,300 middle and high schools and over 400 corporate, civic, and community groups. A PLTW school is a school that has adopted one of the Project Lead the Way standards-based curricula for science, technology, engineering and math, and led by a PLTW teacher, teacher's aide, or by a 3e33713323
