Thyroid-stimulating hormone: its relationship to sex, age, body weight, and clinical status in patients with differentiated thyroid carcinoma. The serum levels of thyrotropin (thyroid-stimulating hormone; TSH), free thyroxine (FT4), and thyroglobulin (TG) were measured by radioimmunoassay in 53 consecutive patients with differentiated thyroid carcinoma (DTC) and 20 healthy controls of similar age and body weight, and in 22 patients with hypothyroidism. The serum levels of TSH, FT4, and TG were significantly higher in DTC than in control subjects (P less than 0.001), and in DTC the serum levels of TSH and FT4 correlated inversely with age, whereas the serum levels of TG correlated positively with the serum levels of TSH. The serum levels of TSH correlated positively with the serum levels of FT4 and TG in DTC patients. In addition, a significantly higher frequency of women had high serum levels of TSH than did men. The serum levels of TSH, FT4, and TG were lower in DTC patients with normal clinical status and with associated disease than in those with extensive DTC and without associated disease, whereas the serum levels of FT4 were significantly higher in DTC patients with extensive disease than in those without. In DTC patients, the serum levels of TSH, FT4, and TG decreased significantly after thyroidectomy, and the serum levels of TSH, FT4, and TG were higher in patients with metastases than in those without. The serum levels of TSH correlated positively with the serum levels of FT4 in DTC patients with normal clinical status but not in those with extensive disease. The serum levels of FT4 were higher in DTC patients with metastases than in those without. Thus, thyroid function is depressed in DTC patients, and the thyroid is functionally important to the well-being of DTC patients.
