Lesson 163 Author: Vladimir Zlenko Published on August 02, 2012 Often, over the long life of a computer user, a huge amount of text is accumulated, interspersed with drawings, photographs, diagrams, tables. These documents often look very chaotic, but they are conveniently stored in a database. The compact clipboard, which we will talk about today, is becoming one of the most necessary elements of any modern operating system. What is a buffer? Buffer (from the English buffer - "empty") - an area on a computer's hard disk that contains text, pictures, links and other information. Consider the most common question on this site: "What is a fast-typed text string?" To do this, you need to slightly expand your understanding of the word "short" and find out what it is. Here is the answer: "Brief" is information necessary for quick and easy processing of information, for example, contained in the body text of a document. Usually it does not contain nested and multiple links, but contains several lines highlighted in different colors and different from each other. We see that short textual information refers to easily processed information and its value is small, so it is called fast. Usually, we type short texts in Word or MS Word. Fast typing text information is also called back buffer. And now about what a back buffer is. Back buffer, (from arr
