It enables you to monitor the Clipboard history area for new text, RTF, HTML and image content, record it for later inspection, and even configure it to autorun without interruption at Windows startup. Localized aromaticity Localized aromaticity is a form of aromaticity associated with localised π electron systems. Many molecules, especially small ring compounds such as cyclopentadiene (C5H5) or naphthalene (C10H8) exhibit localized aromaticity. The concept can also be applied to larger molecules where the delocalised π -system around a ring resembles a smaller isolated ring. In the simplest case of a compound such as triphenylene (C9H5), there is a localized LUMO (lowest unoccupied molecular orbital) on each phenyl ring in a quasi-rigid arrangement around the central ring. In the case of metallocenes, such as dimethylcyclopentadienylzirconium dichloride (Cp*2ZrCl2), the inner region is a metal core surrounded by two delocalised π systems, one from each substituted cyclopentadienyl ligand. In more general terms, the LUMO is considered delocalised as it gives rise to delocalised π electrons in the ligands (clusters) surrounding the metal core. References Category:Chemical bonding Category:Aromaticity History of the Jews in Kishinev The history of the Jews in Kishinev, the capital of Bessarabia (now Chişinău, Moldova), dates back to before the 13th century. According to medieval sources, a Jewish community was established in Kishinev in the first half of the 13th century. By the mid-14th century, the community was one of the wealthiest in Moldavia. Kishinev was a centre of Jewish learning and culture, hosting a vibrant and prosperous Jewish community. Background The Moldavian principality of Bessarabia was a Christian state with a significant Jewish minority under the rule of the Principality of Halych. While some historians believe that the actual origins of the Jews in Moldavia are in the Middle Ages, when some of the present Moldavian Jews may have arrived from Halych, most of them were refugees from the adjacent Kingdom of Poland in the early
