To clarify the effects of a hypothermic stress on the central beta-adrenergic receptors in the rat heart, we measured the density and affinity of these receptors by a rapid autoradiographic method after a brief period of cold exposure in anesthetized rats.

Myocardial beta-adrenergic receptors were labeled by administration of 3H-dihydroalprenolol. After the 20 min cold exposure to 4 degrees C, the affinity of 3H-dihydroalprenolol to myocardial beta-adrenergic receptors decreased significantly in comparison to the control value at 37 degrees C, while the density of the receptor was not changed. These results suggest that a brief period of hypothermia affects the affinity of beta-adrenergic receptors in the rat heart. your driver and get on the road. You need to know what causes really slow Internet speeds with Windows Vista. Sometimes,

your computer is just too slow to handle the load of Windows Vista. Other times, you are getting really slow Internet speeds, even when using a modem with high throughput. The reason for slow Internet speeds might be any one of several factors, but here are a few that you can check to see if they are the cause.

1. A router with no DHCP

capabilities If your router has no DHCP capabilities, Internet speeds are going to be slow. Routers are supposed to act as the middle man between your computer and the Internet, so if your router is connected directly to the modem, it is not going to give you good Internet speeds. 2. Bad drivers It is very possible that your modem drivers are bad. If you are getting high-throughput with your Internet connection, the problem is most likely with the modem drivers, which are stored inside the modem. It is a good idea to search for new modem drivers. Sometimes, the manufacturer of your modem sends out updates, and these updates may fix the problem. 3. Slow

---

Internet service If you live in an area that has slow Internet service, your connection will be slowed down. When you get slow Internet speeds, it is usually the case that you are only sending data and not receiving data, because your computer is not getting enough of a share of the bandwidth. 4.

Not enough RAM When you install software, your computer needs memory to keep it running. This memory is referred to as System RAM (System Random Access Memory). When your computer is slow, you are probably not using all of your System RAM. 5.

Hardware conflict

Sometimes, when your computer is running slower than usual, it can be a hardware conflict. A hardware conflict can be a conflict between two or more pieces of hardware that are installed on your computer. It can also be a conflict between your hardware and Windows Vista, which will slow down your Internet connection, or between Windows Vista and a program that you are running.

---
