Because of the heterogeneous nature of cancer, no drug, whether experimental or approved, is expected to exhibit complete specificity of action and be effective in the treatment of all patients. In addition to direct cytotoxic and immunomodulatory effects on tumor cells, host immunity is crucial to the outcome of therapy. We hypothesize that, in a heterogeneous tumor, selective tumor cell targeting will depend on immunological factors such as MHC class I molecule expression and function, tumor-specific antigen expression, and antigen-processing machinery function. The broad objective of this project is to elucidate the relationship between T-cell antigen recognition, MHC class I molecule expression, and susceptibility to destruction by T-cells specific for tumor antigens. To test this hypothesis, we will correlate the patterns of antigen expression on human and murine tumors and the expression of MHC class I molecules with sensitivity to specific T-cells. Specific T-cells reactive with tumor antigens will be expanded in vitro from human peripheral blood mononuclear cells and mice immunized with human tumor cells. T-cells specific for specific tumor antigens will be used in vitro to assess the pattern of expression of MHC class I molecule on human tumor cells and the functional capacity of tumor cells to induce perforin and granzyme-mediated cytotoxicity in specific T-cells. Finally, we will use a variety of in vivo tumor models to compare the level of expression of MHC class I molecules on murine tumor cells with susceptibility to T-cell-mediated rejection. These studies will help define the molecular and immunological factors that govern the recognition and destruction of tumor cells and the subsequent immune response. How To Install: Drag and Drop the file into the app Double click on the icon to run the program You can run Babya Icon Studio as administrator, this does not make the icon. There is a option to run as administrator in the settings for the application Q: How to find all branches and what branch they are? I am working with some old code which I need to work on. It is not a git repository and I don't know what branches it is on. I know it is on master and a few other branches, but how do I find them and how do I work out what branch I am on? A: I am not sure what you mean by "I don't know what branches it is on". If the repo is in a "standard" state, you can run: `git branch --no-color` And it will print all the branches present in your repo. (You can modify the output format with the `--format` option) Another way to go is to examine your `.git/config` file. A: If you are not sure what branch it is on, you can list all your branches with the `git branch` command like this `$ git branch` This should list all your local branches You can also list remote branches using the `git remote` command `$ git remote -v` This should list all your remotes A: Git makes it quite easy. Have a
