I've got an array in GLSL which is supposed to hold the values: float result[16]; I need the array to have the same number of elements as "int number[16]" in C++. I also need to re-arrange the value of the array in such a way that the array will end up containing: float a[8], b[8], c[8], d[8], e[8], f[8], g[8], h[8], i[8], j[8]; The array is intended to hold 16 relative values from -1.0 to 1.0. I'll need to then compute absolute values of each float and assign these to their appropriate locations in the array. I'm not sure if there's a way to do this with just a single compute shader, but I figured I'd ask anyway. A: Possibly the easiest approach would be to use attribute location to use a GLSL uniform to hold the absolute values.

You could change this from a vector to a 2D matrix if you wanted, but the GLSL uniform would be the better option. Anyways, here's what that code would look like in GLSL: layout (location = 0) in vec2 v; layout (location = 1) uniform vec2 u; void main() { gl_Position = vec4(v * 2.0, 0.0, 1.0); } This computes the absolute value of each value in the vector and places it in the GLSL uniform. You may have to play with the code to get it to work (i.e. you might have to add gl_Position) if you're not using GLSL 1.30 or newer. A: It should be possible to pass the 2D array (value matrix) of size 16 to the shaders as an uniform and

YouTube Music Desktop App is a minimalistic desktop client for the music service. It is a simple

Electron wrapper for the web player, so nothing too spectacular. You can open it, play a song, pause, switch, like/dislike and view the lyrics. It is time for the next Holiday season to end, and the Christmas-themed games and apps are already out to help you get prepared for the festivities, and also some other things. I have always preferred to skip the logic of the holiday season and the events, and end up doing something interesting, yet relevant. For that, I was creating a Christmas themed messenger similar to the WhatsApp messenger, and got to the point where I felt like this is not enough. I am not getting into the whole "Winter is coming" thing, and that kinda thing, I am trying to be more of the anti-Holiday season. I am not sure what you consider the anti-holiday season, but most of us understand "Winter is coming" means Christmas is coming… As a big fan of science and technology, there was always one thing that came in my way of, only code, and no play. However, I made a conscious effort of focusing on the main thing, which is coding and not getting distracted. Now, I am happy to announce to you all that we have finally got the Holidays edition of Xcode playgrounds that can run Xcode games in the simulator. Google has decided to remove the Gallery app from the Play Store, and also Google Play Books. Gallery was only available in several countries, including India. It brings with it a slew of Google apps, including the Chrome browser, Play Music, Play Movies and TV, Google Maps, and the Google Play Games. Google Play Music has been available as a web app for quite some time. It is a little surprising to see that Google still has no native Spotify app on Android. Instead, you have to use a third-party player to enjoy Spotify on Android. Spotify has done a great job of integrating their experience with Android and it made sense to bring it to the users. If you are interested in giving a shot to the Google Play Games, you can download the trial version of the app on Google Play. It is a free app and it is a standalone player like the one we have for the Play Music. Just open it and it should start. There is an option to sign in to your Google account
