Key figures in a case against the British government have admitted "we knew" that the child of an Iraqi family in the UK was abducted more than a decade ago, adding that at least seven people in Parliament knew. Raed Finscibeth, 38, was abducted in 2003 when he was nine months old and a High Court battle is now underway to have him returned to his family in Iraq. The family only discovered what had happened to him four years ago when they received a letter from a Kuwaiti family saying that their little girl had been kidnapped and was now living with them, Mr Justice Richards, who is presiding over the case, was told. The ruling has been adjourned until later this month at which point Finscibeth will have reached the age of 10, when he will have turned 18. Anthony Blair, the then Prime Minister, is facing extradition proceedings over the custody of the child and Conservative MPs are also involved in the case. Ed Vaizey, Mr Blair's Parliamentary Private Secretary, served as Lord Chancellor from 2000 to 2003 and still lives in Croydon, South London, today. The father of the alleged kidnap victim told the hearing that his daughter is now 15, but that they only discovered what happened to him two years ago. When asked by Mr Justice Richards if anyone in Parliament had at any stage been told of the case, Raed Finscibeth's father said: "Yes. Some of them actually... yes, some of them knew about it." The father added: "I can't remember whether it was a meeting with a minister - I don't want to get anyone into trouble - but we knew. We know who knows. We
