An evaluation of the diagnostic and prognostic value of combined serum CA 125 and CA 19-9 levels as a method to differentiate pancreatic from biliary type pancreatic cancer. The objective was to examine the diagnostic and prognostic value of the combination of CA 19-9 and CA 125 levels in the serum as a diagnostic method for differentiating pancreatic cancer (PC) from biliary type (BT) PC. The study group included 42 patients with PC and 10 patients with BT. For comparison, the subjects included 23 patients with chronic pancreatitis and 17 patients with gallstone pancreatitis. PC patients had significantly higher mean serum CA 19-9 and CA 125 levels than BT patients and subjects with either chronic pancreatitis or gallstone pancreatitis. Mean serum CA 19-9 level was significantly higher in patients with PC than BT patients. On the other hand, CA 125 level did not differ significantly between PC and BT patients. In the multivariate logistic regression analysis, a combination of CA 19-9 and CA 125 levels had a strong predictive value to differentiate PC from BT. Thus, the combination of CA 19-9 and CA 125 levels may be valuable in differentiating PC from BT. Furthermore, serum CA 19-9 level was superior to CA 125 for differential diagnosis, and combination of CA 19-9 and CA 125 levels was superior to single CA 19-9 or CA 125 levels for differentiation of PC from BT. Mobile phone networks may use multiple radio access technologies and provide services to mobile stations through any of the different available technologies. For example, multiple 3G mobile networks may be available: for example, a 3G CDMA (code division multiple access) system may be used in the United States and other regions and a 3G UMTS (universal mobile telecommunication systems) system may be used in other regions. In any event, there may be a need to communicate with a mobile station in any available network. As shown in FIG. 1, a mobile station (MS) 100 may be present in a first mobile network 110 (such as a 3G CDMA network) and may also be present in a second mobile network 120 (such as a 3G UMTS network). A wireless communications system (such as an IP (Internet protocol) network or a GSM (global system for mobile communications) system or a 3G wireless system) 150 may be present between the first and second mobile networks 110 and 120, respectively. For example, an Internet connection may be used to provide data service between the first and

Changes in serum prolactin concentration in patients with systemic lupus erythematosus. There has been evidence that prolactin (PRL) has a role in the immune system. The aim of this study was to examine the relationship between serum PRL and disease activity in patients with systemic lupus erythematosus (SLE). Enzyme-linked immunosorbent assay (ELISA) was performed to measure serum PRL concentrations in 40 female patients with SLE and in 40 healthy controls. Disease activity in SLE patients was determined using the Systemic Lupus Erythematosus Disease Activity Index. SLE patients showed higher serum PRL concentrations than the controls, regardless of the presence or absence of menstrual cycle (PA comparison of the optical properties of human and rat eye lenses. The present study analyses the optical properties of the human eye lens and compares the results with those obtained in a previous similar study on the rat eye lens. This study was done to compare the similarities and differences in the optical properties between human and rat eyes. The differences between the two sets of data are discussed. Since the human eye and the rat eye are similar, the results of the study may be used for comparative study on the aging of the human eye lens.
