Structure of the driver: XD //We can see in the structure that the CD is in this component. it is the executable file x //This is the main function with 0x6c05 in the start of the executable. dl //We can see here the declaration of the library. Wine.h //We see here the Winelib.h header i18n //We can see here a include to force i18n. There you have all the information you need for developing with the driver. A: Only the binary, or the binary and the header. There is a lot of legal reasons as to why you should not ship even the header. I'd say your best bet is to ship a version with most of the files, and send the source files and all the info about how to run the binary to the guy whose name is in the title of that file. A: As per "Project Firefox 3.6" documentation: Project Firefox 3.6 was written by: D. Haviland C. F. O'Brien O. Maurier The page lists the following requirements: Project Firefox 3.6 is distributed as a stand alone Windows binary, written as a single executable file. The source code is under the General Public License version 2 (GPLv2). A separate build system which produces Windows binary is used. A build system using the MSVC (Visual Studio 2005) compiler is used. The Visual Studio project file requires project name: Project Firefox 3.6 and the file is named Project_Firefox.sln. The documentation included with project includes detailed API documentation. The API documentation is not shipped to the user because it would be a prerequisite to the software licensing required to run Project Firefox 3.6. The documentation is included in the application directory in Project_Firefox.pdf. Project Firefox 3.6 is being distributed in source form for the convenience of users that want to customize the software without buying the rights to use the customizations
