Public attitudes toward two major surgery inpatients' outcomes: mental health and length of stay. This study explored public views on the two major outcomes of major inpatient surgery--mental health and length of stay. We collected data from 206 members of the public using a survey. Participants were presented with hypothetical scenarios and asked how they would feel about hypothetical patients. Participants viewed mental health and length of stay as equally important outcomes of major surgery. They expressed dissatisfaction with current health care systems for patients requiring inpatient surgery. The results of the present study highlight the need for explicit consideration of outcome in health care policy.

Differential modulation of rat adrenal and medullary cyclic AMP pools by phorbol ester and thyrotropin stimulation in vitro. The phorbol ester, 12-O-tetradecanoylphorbol 13-acetate, and the Gs activator, thyrotropin (TSH) stimulation of cyclic AMP accumulation in the adrenal and medullary tissues of male rats was examined in vitro and compared with the response of the ACTH-stimulated organ. TSH and phorbol ester (1×10^{-7} M) were each able to stimulate the accumulation of cyclic AMP in vitro by greater than twofold in the adrenal and fivefold in the medulla. Phorbol ester by itself was not stimulatory in either organ. TSH at a concentration of 10^{-7} M and phorbol ester at 1×10^{-6} M or higher were able to stimulate cyclic AMP accumulation to the same extent as ACTH (10^{-8} M). The ability of phorbol ester to stimulate accumulation of cyclic AMP in adrenal tissue was enhanced by the presence of ACTH (10^{-8} M) or the cyclic AMP phosphodiesterase inhibitor, RO 20-1724. In the medulla, however, phorbol ester was a much less potent stimulator than was TSH. Stimulation of cyclic AMP accumulation by the two agents was inhibited by the protein kinase inhibitor, H7. The ability of TSH to stimulate cyclic AMP accumulation was studied in the absence of exogenous hormone; it was stimulatory in the presence of ACTH (10^{-8} M). (ABSTRACT TRUNCATED AT 250 WORDS)
