a. The interface is not particularly attractive but comfortable to work with, thanks to the minimalistic layout. b. You can easily make it your default torrent client, thanks to the simple interface. c. Create a new torrent file by specifying the creator name, comment, piece size (KBs) and output destination. d. In addition, you can mark it as private, point out the source file or directory for constructing the torrent and generated torrent name, as well as enter tracker URLs and web seed URLs and DHT nodes. e. During installation you can associate Halite with torrent files. f. Configure download and upload parameters, such as transfer rates, maximum connections, connection limits, pause the task and reannounce trackers. Copyright (C) 2013 Maciej Orłowski, Gábor Maróti, Marcin Kozik When a torrent reaches a certain size, it becomes "seeded". This is done through a technique called "seeding". It basically means that a user has downloaded the full content of the torrent and is ready to share it with others. A good example is a movie file. When you buy a DVD, you have to own a computer, download the content of the movie, put it into your DVD drive and then you can use the movie on any device. But the movie itself is actually sent to you through the internet in the form of a torrent file. It means that a single user can put the movie on thousands of devices, all while sharing it with the world.
