Now pitchers have to face hitters, and it's with catchers behind the plate that they do it, for more than just just a BP. "You get pitchers for trying to make pitches now," Trout said. "You try to execute the pitches and things change." "It's a lot more exciting for the pitchers," he continued. "Obviously for the offense, but for the pitching side it's a lot more, nowadays a lot of times, you have to execute pitches. You have to execute pitches. That's the biggest difference." The main thing hitters have to adjust to is the chance pitchers make mistakes. That's usually when they have to work on the mechanics of their swing, which is a natural thing they do for their own self-improvement. As for the pitchers, they have to focus on sequencing and tempo. That's the difference. They have to think about where the pitch will end up and where they want it to go when they release it. They need to have a good idea of the time the ball will reach the plate. "If you get a strike, you can get it back and away," Shoemaker said. "You have to be consistent and show you're a good pitcher." Injury Update It was announced earlier today that Grant Green and first baseman C.J. Cron will both be out a few weeks with injuries. Green suffered an ankle injury on Saturday and Cron is dealing with a strained groin. "C.J. is a more important player to our lineup," Angels manager Mike Scioscia said. "We'll probably try to get him on the field as fast as he can." Green and Cron will both be re-evaluated when they're healthy, with the team waiting until they're 100 percent before playing them. 570a42141b
