It will create a shorter, more direct route to London for hundreds of passengers each day, and reduce journey times by at least 50 per cent. The link will also support the local economy and increase connectivity to the region. It will also create thousands of new jobs over the coming decades. After a planning consultation, Ofgem have published their final advice on the proposed route today. In the final version of their advice, Ofgem say they are 'in principle' in support of the line. They have now asked National Grid to carry out a full environmental impact assessment, and expect the process to take a year.
