Earlier this year, Facebook removed a policy that banned members from uploading, uploading, sharing or promoting content that violated the social giant's terms of service. This meant, however, that the company had to enlist a massive army of volunteers and train them to monitor and categorize content on the site. Additionally, Facebook itself needed to take a policing role with its moderators and with its new Task (Search) Queue feature, which acts as a catchall for the many people who check Facebook for interesting content but don't know exactly what to look for. In the past two months alone, Facebook's latest and greatest features have proven to be the social network's most effective in combating child abuse, bullying and other hate speech on the site. While the site still has a long way to go, it has received praise from celebrities and other pundits of the internet. Facebook itself was a relative newcomer to policing the internet in the early years of the 2000s. And still, back in 2006 the company launched the "Friend Finder" -- a division designed to help people locate friends and family lost on the internet. It later added groups, followed by location tools, safety features and other features. Facebook eventually ramped up its policing efforts, similar to how Google and Twitter operate, in preparation for new content moderation tools that would be rolled out in the future. Like other large social media platforms, Facebook is still growing in size and influence. In the last year, Mark Zuckerberg has admitted that Facebook needs to slow down its growth to accommodate other companies as they start to use the company's newest features. This particular week's Facebook News Feed featured a few posts from the company's safety team. In an "April Fool's" article titled "The Secret World of Facebook Safety," Facebook even announced that it had removed 2 billion fake accounts around the world. In an April Fools' Day joke, the company sent out 10 million new alerts to users about the fake accounts. As of April 6, Facebook has reported that it had removed 770 million items of content, with Facebook's new algorithm removing at least 54% of the content deemed unacceptable by the community, which amounts to roughly a billion pieces of content. Facebook has reported that in the last 30 days, its news feed has reached almost 700 million people. Beyond the new algorithm, Facebook has a new way to categorize, deactivate and ban certain content as well. Earlier this month, the company rolled out its Task (Search) Queue tool, which lets users mark certain types of content as "uninteresting" 3e33713323
