Some are downright complex or user unfriendly. Some don't even work well for developers. In my opinion something is missing here. I'm not talking about tools for simple queries or file processing. I'm talking about tools for web development itself. Something that encompasses all of the web and helps you build it faster and with greater ease. While it is true that some tools may help you build your website better than others, there is a common limitation for all of them, that's the inability to fully encompass the scope of the web. Most web development tools, even some very popular ones, don't offer an option to create a fully customized URL or add access control. As a result, they only cover a subset of the web and some of them even only cover the basics. They have been built for a limited scope and cannot handle advanced options and non-technical users, often resulting in website design that is far from being perfect. There are a few tools that are built for everything from beginning to advanced, but they are incredibly cumbersome and complex. Some of
