A case of intrauterine death of a newborn with serious morphological alterations of fetal hemopoiesis is described. The cause of the death was the embryotoxic potential of 6-mercaptopurine: during pregnancy it caused hypoplasia and maturation arrest in various lineages of hemopoietic cells. The immature erythroid series was severely affected, being characterized by some reduction of precursor cells and a marked increase of early erythroblasts with reduced nuclear-cytoplasmic ratio, hypersegmented chromosomes, evident progression of the granulocytic series and rare occurrence of mature granulocytes. The lymphoid series was characterized by severe increase of pro-B cells and T lymphocytes. Remarkably, there was marked cell dysplasia in the undifferentiated hemopoietic lineages.**A, **b**.) (EJHS_A08_F4) (#F4) !Catalytic performance of ethene on modified Mesoporous Titanium dioxide (MTiO) in solution (EJHS_A08_F5) (#F5) Discussion ===== In this study, a comparative analysis of the photocatalytic reaction of ethene to methylene blue on MTiO nanocrystals synthesized by sol-gel and hydrothermal methods was performed. The presence of a large number of active catalytic sites on the surface of MTiO nanoparticles was confirmed using surface area measurement and BET. The high photocatalytic activity of MTiO nanocatalysts compared to silver nanoparticles was confirmed by photocatalytic tests using methylene blue as a surrogate model molecule of a toxic pollutant. The results obtained showed that the nanocatalysts synthesized using modified sol-gel method by incorporating metals such as noble metals, have significant photocatalytic performance, hence they could be employed to remove toxic pollutants. The photocatalytic test results obtained in this study suggest that the quantity of copper incorporated on the surface of MTiO nanocatalyst did not influence the activity of the catalyst. It was concluded that the copper 6a5afdad4c
