According to the New York Post, the actress and her family had taken over an event room at Neeson's house after a Christmas Eve party got out of hand, when the actress' father decided to speak with some guests. Neeson reportedly told the guests, "I've got something to say. You know who I hate, and I hate them so much. They're all called the IRA - you know, the Irish Republican Army," according to reports. "You know what they did to me in the Irish War of Independence? F*** the IRA," Neeson reportedly added, according to the Post. While some of the guests thought the famed actor was joking, one guest told a representative of the Irish Embassy: "He's not Irish. He's English. He thinks he can speak Gaelic." Chloe did not respond to a request for comment, but she shared a picture of the party on Instagram on Wednesday, along with a video of the gathering. The actress and her husband, "Game of Thrones" star Maisie Williams, are also expecting their second child together in April. "So it's a girl!" Williams tweeted on Sunday. On a recent episode of "Talking Funny," the actress discussed having a second child and whether she'd feel like a "mommy's girl" if they had a son.Q: How to recover a lost password (without a computer)? I...I had a very similar experience when I started. I got bogged down by the fears you described, but the information I found here helped me get past them. Here's my suggestion: Create a "cheerful list" for yourself. It can be anything from positive/affirming to baby-related. I created mine because I'm in the baby/child-related scene; and I came up with something that really worked for me. Each day, I write what I'm thankful for in my life, and also what I want to create in my life. It helps me feel like I'm actually doing something to better myself, and I'm very glad I started doing it.Good luck!Stacey
