Elizabeth Warren from speaking at a campaign event in Cleveland because she called President Trump a racist is pretty much the last straw, and most people in the audience don't agree. The Standing Rock Sioux Tribe member spoke to Warren at a rally at a Cleveland community center on Friday, as the Massachusetts Democrat remains locked in a tight race to take on Trump for the Democratic nomination. Her speech, which also included a call for more gun control, was interrupted by more than a dozen members of the Cleveland Police Department — including two officers who escorted her out of the room. Warren calmly told the audience she was just trying to speak and that she hopes to ask Sen. Bernie Sanders a question at the rally but that she didn't plan to interrupt him, according to a report from The Hill. The Hill reported that Warren's speech lasted about two hours. "Warren has long been a liberal darling and
