The major difference between Photoshop and Photoshop Elements is the interface. Aspect ratio Many popular plugins for Photoshop need specific pixels to do their magic. A common width of the canvas is 32 pixels or 96 dpi (dots per inch). A user-defined custom size of the canvas can be configured on the camera by adding several other numbers, resulting in other widths, e.g. 24 dpi and 40 dpi. But the default is 96 dpi. When you open an image in Photoshop, Photoshop Elements or any other graphic editing software, it is set to the default size of 96 dpi. If you like to work on a smaller canvas, you have to resize it. If you resize a photo, the canvas does not change size. It remains 96 pixels wide. When using Photoshop as an image editor, you may use the default or a custom size of the canvas (these are the same as you can choose in the camera). If you zoom in or out, the canvas will zoom accordingly, but the width remains 96 pixels. When you work on your photos, the canvas automatically changes size to fit the actual size of your photos. If you scale down your canvas (change the width and height values), it will not change its actual size. It will remain 96 pixels wide but will become the specified width and height. For the original, you can set the canvas dimensions to what you like. You may use the camera to set the picture. You can also use the picture editor to crop or rotate the photo. Then, set the canvas to the custom size of the photo. Zoom from 4x to 100x As mentioned, the canvas size changes to fit the actual size of your image, but the actual size of the canvas does not change. In other words, you can zoom into your image from its four corners in order to see how the quality changes as you zoom in. Zoom in and out You can zoom in (zoom in) and out (zoom out) up to 100x. The value of 100x means that you can zoom in by 100 pixels, or zoom out by 100 pixels. If you zoom in by 10 pixels, you zoom into the image by 10 pixels, and if you zoom out by 10 pixels, you zoom out by 10 pixels. To zoom in (Zoom in), click the Zoom tool and 388ed7b0c7

When I was only a toddler, my grandmother told me stories about people from the city and how they would come here, all the way from...down the street. I wanted to know why they left and how they got here, but I got even more excited when I found out that I was a part of their history. With each winter storm, the flakes have come down steadily for weeks. I've always been fascinated with the history of the Great Plains and how this landscape has been shaped by settlers, trade routes, and the United States. My personal connection to the land that I walked through so often as a child is feeling more real these days. Winter isn't just a season anymore. It's a way of life. When I walk with my girlfriend through the ice and snow of the park, the whiteness around us looks pristine, but inside I can feel everything from the chilled air to the slick surface, reminding me that I'm walking on my own two feet on someone else's home. The future is a lot more interesting, I think. It's full of possibilities and without the heavy influence of humans, it feels like the land could finally breathe and make some room for itself. From the November issue: As someone who has always been on the agricultural end of the spectrum, I've always held a deep respect for the landscape and the elements that shape it. Back in high school I developed a deep appreciation for the Big Sky Country, but thanks to the epic deluge that has put me at home for the past few weeks, I've come to appreciate it even more. I've been spending every spare minute I can out there, trying to get some of my favorite places on camera. The weather has made it a lot easier. The snow gives us cover from the frigid temperatures, but it also creates a blank canvas for the photographers and painters of the landscape. The night before and the morning of our arrival, we were preparing for the busy couple of days ahead of us. I've seen some great snowboarding, photography, and backcountry skiing, but nothing that comes close to an experience like this. From the March issue: In the spring of 2011, I just happened to be in Arizona with a buddy of mine and somehow wound up spending the night at a dude ranch in the mountains near the Grand Canyon. While most people

March 5, 2020 - Toronto, ON - Today, following a two-hour legal hearing, the Toronto District School Board (TDSB) voted unanimously to cancel classes for the rest of the school year. The board has also voted to immediately begin the process of assessing whether the school year will be extended. With these measures, students are encouraged to continue learning online, and they will receive a statement to that effect on Tuesday, March 11. During today's meeting, the board listened to the advice of their legal counsel and reviewed the legal measures they could take to protect students, staff, and the community. In light of this advice, board members voted to cancel the remainder of the school year, effective immediately. In the coming days, the board will continue to monitor and assess the health and safety risks of students and staff, including the availability of PPE and measures to protect children from exposure. The board will also assess whether schools should remain open in the fall. "The safety of our students and our community is the top priority for the Toronto District School Board," said Toronto District School Board Chair Janet Fraser. "It is our responsibility to make sure that all students are safe, and we are doing all we can to ensure that happens." Following today's meeting, the TDSB will be holding a regularly scheduled meeting tomorrow, March 6. all the information, none of the junk | biotech • healthcare • life sciences The FDA's Kite Pharma Says It's Getting What It Paid For in Its Phase 3 Trial of Pfizer's Copanlisib A new set of trial results — which show a 9.7 percent improvement in progression-free survival (PFS) in the first 12 weeks of treatment for patients with chronic lymphocytic leukemia who already are on at least two other drugs — show that Pfizer's copanlisib is doing what it was supposed to, despite the company's balky Phase 3 trial for breast cancer that ended earlier this year. Noting that its next-door neighbor at the National Institutes of Health, the National Cancer Institute, is currently enrolling patients in a trial of copanlisib for that disease, Pfizer could use some good news. The news is that that there's nothing as good in the pipeline in terms of a breast cancer drug, unless there's been a late-stage rethinking
