cancer and with 3% in cervical cancer. Age-standardized incidence rates in these last sites were high in almost every region of the world, especially in Africa. Mortality from these cancers is particularly high in certain areas. Lymphomas and the lung and ovarian cancers are the leading sites of cancer death in women, and lung cancer in men. Other solid tumours are the main causes of death. The overall 5-year survival rate for men is 69% for cancer of the lip, larynx, and hypopharynx, 74% for colorectal cancer, 52% for stomach cancer, and 40% for prostate cancer. It is important to highlight that in both sexes, men have a higher cancer death rate than women. The proportions of deaths by cancer for the world's population are presented in table 3{ref-type="table"}. Each year, more than 800 000 deaths are attributed to cancer, which is the second leading cause of death in the world. Globally, age-standardized mortality rates have increased, and almost all regions have experienced a rise in the last two decades. Particularly, in men and in the case of cancer of the lung, stomach, and prostate, the mortality rates are increasing at a much greater pace than the corresponding incidence rates.

This can be from a variety of factors, including osteoporosis, bone fractures, osteopenia, low activity levels, decreased dietary calcium, or low levels of Vitamin D. For more information, see Bone Density. Finally, if you are not having symptoms to make you think you have bone loss, you should still have a bone density test at this time. The reason for this is that bone loss is not the only way you can be at risk for osteoporosis.1. Dietary Intake. If you are already being told you are at risk for osteoporosis and you are taking daily supplements, you should continue to take them. Many people find it difficult to maintain adequate vitamin D levels. One way to do this is to add supplements to your diet at snack time. Breakfast typically is the only time you are eating, but if you want to increase your intake of foods high in calcium and Vitamin D, it may be best to add them to your day.2. Signs and symptoms of osteoporosis. As osteoporosis progresses, your bones lose strength and become brittle. There are many signs and symptoms of osteoporosis. Signs include a fracture, spinal pain, tingling and numbness in the arms or legs, decreased activity levels, and the inability to walk. About three out of every four individuals with osteoporosis will have a fracture at some point in their lives. You may not notice bone loss until you have a fracture. When a person has bone loss, it is commonly believed that bone loss is also occurring at the site of the fracture.3. 4. Partial and total body bone density A bone density test is the
