The feature requires those who select it to make sure they have enough space for the World Cup hosts, Russia, to use a ball or ball-kit as they want. FIFA 18 introduced the first motion capture technology, named "Movement Transfer." It allowed players to not only become almost immobile in order to fake injuries, but to have a motion captured body be used to become an immobile player. Players can choose which body movements they would like transferred into their player. Players can collect body part movements by scoring a goal or playing a specific way. Players can use the following body parts to mimic injuries: Abdomen, Arms, Ankle, Back, Body, Chest, Chin, Clavicle, Elbow, Eye, Finger, Fingers, Head, Hands, Hip, Knee, Leg, Leg Muscle, Neck, Nose, Overload, Pelvis, Rib Cage, Shoulder, Shoulder Blade, Shoulder Hump, Shoulder Muscle, Shoulders, Shin, Skate, Spine, Torso, Thigh, Toe, Trunk, Wrist. Players can also choose to use body part movements to play a particular way. For example, using patellar tendon straps to make a defender hold his leg or placing shin pads on the outside of the leg to make a defender use that leg to defend. FIFA 18 introduced the first form of injury, where players could fake injuries by making themselves appear injured. FIFA 17 introduced "Goalkeeper Interference." It was first used in the USMNT-Mexico game, and it allows the goalkeeper to play defense to an injured area on the field. The goalkeeper's offensive movement is pre-set for defending any space in the box. This was later taken to a whole new level of pain by FIFA 17 introducing "Goalkeeper Interference Volatile." That allows the goalkeeper to have a pre-set offense for any space in the box. 2017 FIFA World Cup™ Reveals: Everything You Need to Know The FIFA Interactive World Cup brings FIFA football to life in a new way.
