The accumulation of misfolded proteins and subsequent aggregation of neurodegenerative protein aggregates, termed amyloid, are the pathophysiological hallmarks of Alzheimer's, Parkinson's and Huntington's diseases and many other neurodegenerative disorders. The mechanisms by which these accumulations are formed and propagate within the brain are poorly understood. Here we tested the hypothesis that the production of a pathological protein by a healthy cell or tissue has a deleterious impact on the surrounding cells or tissue. By reconstituting a recombinant fragment of the glycine receptor alpha1 subunit (rGLRA) transgene of a transgenic mouse model (tgGLRA) expressing a fragment of the alpha1 subunit of the glycine receptor protein, we showed that the heterologous protein was toxic for the host cells. We found a prion-like propagation of rGLRA in the cell cultures of both naïve and transgenic mice. When a transgenic mouse expressing rGLRA was injected with recombinant rGLRA, rGLRA could be detected in the brain tissue of the recipient mice. The rGLRA was localized in the hippocampus, the striatum and the cortex. The data suggest that the production of rGLRA by healthy animals may be detrimental to the host tissues. Ask HN: Help with task management? - transburgh Having read and hear so much about Evernote.com, is there something else out there that will assist me to quickly organize, and track my tasks? I have tons of them and I'm tired of trying to stay organized in Evernote. I'm looking for something similar that will help organize my tasks and provide a visual interface. Any suggestions are
