Animals – The Ultimate Caregiver Interview By Alana Daleyn / November 15, 2018 We're all familiar with the furry creatures in our lives — and we don't always fully realize it. Whether these furry friends are puppies, kittens, rabbits, hamsters, guinea pigs, ferrets, fish, reptiles, or even rodents, these companions can teach us so much about care and compassion. Although they can be tricky to care for, it's always an amazing journey to watch them grow and learn. Some animals come with relatively little expense, and many of them are quite easy to care for, however, the following animals require training, exercise, and a certain amount of respect to be both comfortable and safe around them.

Mammals

Rabbits Most rabbits are friendly, playful animals that love to munch on treats. They require a comfortable cage, because they can easily escape if they're not in a safe area. They need to be kept relatively close to the food and water you give them, and if their cage is not out in the open, it will make them feel safer and more secure. Rabbits need a healthy diet of pellets, hay, and veggies. They don't need much exercise, but if your rabbits are in a natural habitat, they will require a safe place to hop about and roam.

Hamsters Hamsters are such sweet and friendly pets that they're becoming very popular these days. They can live for many years if given the right care. Keeping hamsters in the house isn't a great idea, but you can definitely keep them in the backyard. If you choose to add a hamster to the mix, make sure they have an escape-proof enclosure, because they are quite capable of escaping if they feel in danger. They need a safe cage, as well as a box with suitable bedding and toys to play with. Hamsters need to be fed a healthier diet, as they will be prone to diseases such as pneumonia.

Ferrets Ferrets are very popular pets these days. They're affectionate, friendly, and intelligent, and they make great companions. They require a cage that's large enough to allow them room to run around, but small enough for them to be safe when they're not around you. They need enrichment, as well as a healthy diet
