* The Official Adobe Photoshop Blog

(www.adobe.com/creativecloud/blogs/photoshop.html): This blog is written by people who work at Adobe and publishes some very useful information about Photoshop. # PART II # DIGITAL ART AND DESIGN # 6 # Enhancing Your Skills with Digital Art Materials As in the past, many people have reverted back to digital tools as they no longer find themselves feeling as intimidated when they create artwork onscreen. The availability of digital art materials has grown to provide many new choices and a wider variety than ever before. This part of the book starts with a description of the importance of creating with the color management tool on your computer, and the chapter continues with color correction programs and other software used to manipulate color and tones. In this part of the book, you discover how to make your images look natural, either by creating color schemes or by using some of the many digital tools to modify color, exposure, and other aspects of an image. You may know of these tools already, but you may be surprised by some of the innovations available today. This part even takes you to the shores of the Santa Cruz Mountains and gives you the freedom to experiment with a range of additional tools that all contribute to fine art and digital photography. In this chapter, you also find out how to use Photoshop's other features to enhance your work. You discover how to use the Brush tool to add textures, how to crop, and how to draw and paint. You also find out how to use filters such as Soft Light, High Pass, and Split Toning to create beautiful effects that you can use to give an image a dreamy look. You discover how to use the Magic Wand tool to correct both color and tonal problems, and you discover how to use the Liquify Filter for warping, distorting, and twisting images. ## Color Management If you want to get the best color results, you need to manage color accurately. Photoshop's Color Settings (discussed in Chapter 5) can help you get the color of your image right the first time. (In Chapter 5, you also learn how to use the Window menu to change the color settings — but you can change them in other ways, too.) However, if you want to produce a color reproduction that produces accurate results for any device, from screen to print, you need to manage your color profiles (which are found in Conjugation of cholesteryl esters and phospholipids in larval growth of the malaria vector, Anopheles gambiae. Larvae of the malaria vector, Anopheles gambiae, fed a diet containing pyridine-¹⁴C-oleic acid were fed a diet containing [methyl-³H]cholesteryl oleate or [methyl-³H]cholesteryl hexadecyl phosphonate. The label was retained by both the mosquito tissues and the excreted pools of lipids. The adult females from the latter and larval pools indicated that most of the label was attached to phospholipids. The female midgut contained the highest amounts of label followed by the Malpighian tubules. Anal papillae contained low quantities of the labeled lipids. Only in the carcass did [methyl-³H]cholesteryl oleate label occur as a significant portion of the total label (18%).

A physiologically based pharmacokinetic-pharmacodynamic (PBPK-PD) modeling strategy for prediction of myelosuppression in a preclinical setting. Myelosuppression is one of the dose-limiting toxicities in chemo-radiotherapy. We have developed a physiologically based pharmacokinetic-pharmacodynamic (PBPK-PD) modeling framework to predict myelosuppression in a preclinical setting. First, pharmacokinetics was investigated in rats ($n = 5$) under different dosing schedules. Next, dose-dependent changes in peripheral blood cell counts were examined in mice ($n = 14$) under different dosing schedules. For modeling purposes, we incorporated the time-varying endogenous levels of neutrophils and neutrophil-to-lymphocyte ratio (NLR) into the PBPK model. Simulation results showed that decreased hematological variables in treated animals are the result of two antagonistic processes; (i) the function of natural killer (NK) cells that increase during the first phase (week 1-3), and (ii) the activation of systemic inflammation with increased levels of the chemo-attractants tumor necrosis factor- α (TNF α) and interleukin-1 α (IL-1 α), which trigger the proliferation of bone marrow NK cells. The increase in the number of peripheral blood leukocytes is sustained during the second phase (week 5-7) and is followed by the clearance

Creating a Custom Shape If you want to use a brush, you must create a brush that you can modify as you wish. To create a custom brush, follow these steps: 1. Choose New to start a new brush. 2. For the Brush Options bar, select Size, Spacing, and Hardness from the Brush drop-down menu. Make sure that your brush tip size is 11 pixels and the spacing is 4 pixels (see Figure 6-29). Figure 6-29: Tweak the brush settings to create your own custom brush. 3. Use the and keys to quickly change your brush settings to the ones you prefer. If you're using a Pen or Calligraphy tool, go to the Effects panel and use the Pen and Calligraphy options to get a feel for what you can do with this tool.
