Sentinel: Taking a Stand for the Humorless, the Milk-Covered, and the Not So Different Thursday, October 26, 2006 New Photo - The Anti-Photoshop A.D.D. is Born! I haven't been blogging much recently. I've been doing a lot of "real work" and, to be honest, it's been fun, but I've been very busy. I'm working on a "behind the scenes" book about my photography. The book is a collection of images I took and are in the process of being retouched. The photos in the book will have a very different feel than the ones you've seen here for many years. The photos will be rougher, the edges a little wonky, the quality far superior than I have been able to achieve here. The best way to describe the difference is: First, there will be NO KITONAL STREAKS! I have a wonderful artist who is great at painting, but I can't walk a dog or even brush a cat - which means I had better do all the painting myself. I know there's a LOT of art that's created digitally and I have no issue with that - in fact, I love the challenge of creating something a little different every time. But before I can even think about trying my hand at digital art, I had to master Photoshop - and I'm better off without Photoshop in my life, thank you very much. I have zero patience with learning, and I'm as clumsy as a rhino up a steep hill. I do have "tricks" though, some of which I learned in a full-on Photoshop class, some of which I learned by learning the mouse gestures on my computer. Many of the tools Photoshop provides are too important to go without, so I wanted to explore the ones I'm most comfortable with. The ones I use every day: Adobe Photoshop ($70 per year from Adobe Creative Suite, not including Lightroom) Adobe Camera Raw ($60 per year from Creative Suite, not including Lightroom) Adobe Bridge ($70 per year from Creative Suite, not including Lightroom) Adobe Fireworks ($100 per year from Creative Suite, not including Lightroom) Adobe Dreamweaver ($100 per year from Creative Suite, not including Lightroom) Adobe Illustrator ($100 per year from Creative Suite, not including Autopsy findings after hip replacement: prospective evaluation of 304 cases. The major advantage of hip replacement is pain relief, but early and late mortality, as well as specific morbidity, need to be considered. We performed a prospective study to evaluate the clinical results and complications. Between 1982 and 1990, 304 unselected patients (142 males, 162 females) received total hip replacement. The indication for surgery was osteoarthritis in 91% of cases. Surgical procedures consisted of cemented and uncemented Charnley-Hastings acetabular and stainless-steel Oxford primary and secondary total hip arthroplasty. We analyzed the clinical status, the walking distance, and the functional outcome at follow-up after 2-10 years (mean, 4.9 years). The mean pain score on a visual analogue scale decreased from 4.1 to 1.7. Walking distance had increased from 295 m to 815 m. The Harris hip score had increased from 55 points preoperatively to 87 points postoperatively, and the OHS had increased from 20 points to 51 points. Twenty-four perioperative complications occurred in 23 cases. Thirteen cases required revision for infection (three cases), four for aseptic loosening, three for structural failure, and three for instability. Four patients died from causes not related to their hip replacement. Three patients required limb amputation because of ischemic necrosis of the limb. Our results show that the advantages of hip replacement are pain relief, improved quality of life, and increased walking distance. The percentage of poor clinical results is in accordance with the literature, although our revision rates are significantly lower. The reasons for this are probably not only the selection of patients who are at a higher risk for poorer clinical results, but also the unusually high percentage of complications after hip replacement.(ABSTRACT TRUNCATED AT 250 WORDS)Surreal Number 1) Big Bang Theory. It's hard to rank this show. It always gets better. That is until Sheldon goes to do something really ridiculous. I think it's a group hug, or at least that is what it looks like. 2) I love Bob and Alice. I especially love Bob. I have a problem being lonely. Whenever there's a reason for me to feel lonely, Bob makes sure that I know I am not. I think it's sweet. 3) That's the end of the rankings. Of course I love
