What's New In?

The purpose of this proposal is to understand the mechanisms that regulate ameloblast differentiation. Ameloblasts are secretory cells which undergo dramatic morphological changes during tooth development in order to create its calcified extracellular matrix. In the dog, immature incisor ameloblasts differentiate and secrete an acidic, fibrillar collagen-based matrix, they then progress through an alkali-transforming stage and finally differentiate to form an insoluble bone-like dentin. This process is known to be regulated by genes that are either tooth-specific, or expressed in a tooth-specific manner. We propose that key cell-cell signaling pathways that are initially activated in the stem cell compartment of the dental papilla are altered to restrict cell proliferation and to influence differentiation, and that these altered signaling pathways ultimately trigger the down-regulation of a tooth-specific inhibitor(s) that ultimately allows ameloblast differentiation. The specific aims of this proposal are: 1) To determine whether the switch between pluripotent stem cells and committed odontogenic lineages occurs in defined endodermal cell populations, and to determine whether the step-wise expression of the three factors, Msx1, Shh, and DLX3, is linked to the downregulation of the inhibitors of ameloblast differentiation, BMP4 and DSPP; 2) To determine whether the hyper-proliferation of specific odontogenic lineages, which normally occurs in the E13.5 cranial neural crest, is controlled by the pre-commitment of these lineages to tooth differentiation; and 3) To determine whether dental papilla cells, which are committed to ameloblast differentiation, are able to trans-differentiate, in vitro, to an ameloblastic phenotype when co-cultured with cranial neural crest derived epithelial cells.Q: Connection Error - could not open connection to sql server db I'm new to programming using .NET and Visual Studio.
