d3ac5ce05fbt give up my job to spend two hours a day struggling to get drugs for an 18 month old, I don't think I'd give up my job to pay for her schooling. Would I sacrifice a lot to give her a better chance at university, probably, but not as much as giving her a family. "What a woman wants, a man can't provide." —- I wonder why. A couple of years ago when men dominated my life by virtue of their presence, I decided it was time to find out who were my true friends and my true lovers. It wasn't easy at first, and took me longer than I thought it would. But some friendships developed and relationships that had been months or years in the making, matured and became very rich. Others didn't. For those who were willing to change how they thought about me, to tolerate how I looked and even be prepared to fight for me, I'd like to think I'm grateful. The end result was, in three years, I had the relationship I wanted. The one I had been longing for. I still thought of myself as an outsider in my friends' lives, but for the first time in my life I was OK with that. It meant that I now had the space to really enjoy being a young, successful, single woman. One who was allowed to make her own mistakes. A partner who only ever prioritised me and our relationship. The last thing I needed as a single mum was the media telling me I wasn't good enough. To them, I am a single mother. To me, I'm just a mum. As I say, I don't want my children to be ashamed of me. But when the media start to misgender my children, it makes it harder for me to be accepted as a single mum.Q: Make button do nothing until another method is called (e.g. on click of a different button) I have a function which is called every time my first button is clicked. It does some complicated things and also modifies some variables in the app. The issue is that I need a second button to do some other important things and

However, a large percentage of malignant bone tumors, including metastases, are not resectable due to size, location or proximity to critical, functional structures. Due to the inherent difficulty of resecting large tumors from the bone, open osteotomy is not a useful technique for the majority of bone tumors. Endoprosthetic reconstruction is a viable option for malignant bone tumors that are amenable to resection, but is limited by the availability of bone that can be predictably incorporated into the prosthesis, as well as the failure rate, nonunion rates, and the need for revision. Radiation therapy, either alone or in conjunction with chemotherapy, is a useful treatment modality to inactivate residual tumor cells that are thought to remain after surgery. While it is accepted that radiation therapy is effective in eliminating the majority of treated tumor cells, the technique is associated with many drawbacks. Radiation therapy is an effective treatment modality, but there can be effects on surrounding normal tissues, such as severe complications to the spinal cord. Tumors of the spine are difficult to treat because dose escalation to the tumor is limited by radiation toxicity to the surrounding normal tissues. In addition, radiation therapy can induce bone resorption, which may compromise fixation of an endoprosthetic component. A less invasive technique to manage these large tumors is ex vivo manipulation, including reimplantation of bone following resection
