Recall the May 3, 2014, front-page article, "Shovelers in hit and run case," about the investigation into the death of a 1-year-old boy who was struck by a 2005 Jeep Cherokee driven by his mother. Upon arrest in October 2015, the mother was charged with reckless driving, failing to secure a vehicle, negligent driving, careless driving and leaving the scene of an accident, and her son's death was ruled an accident. She did not get a trial. Her daughter, 8 years old at the time, testified for the state. Although she admitted she had admitted lying to police, she claimed she had done it because she was scared. After her daughter had been on the stand, she was arrested for one count of obstruction of justice for lying to a police officer. She pleaded guilty. Interestingly enough, the article did not mention that the girl, who was 10 years old at the time of the accident, made a statement to police almost immediately after the accident that was contradicted by the testimony of the mother and the testimony of the impact expert, who said the boy would have been killed or badly injured if the mother had not let go of the steering wheel and locked it into position as soon as she saw the boy walking. The article also did not mention that the mother was exonerated by a jury last July. However, the jury was not told that the mother had lied in her trial testimony, in her deposition, and on the witness stand. I asked the officer who arrested the mother
