☐ Business (formal) correspondence templates ☐ Cover pages, tournament and league brackets and certificates templates | Presentation and presentation background templates | School with the spreadsheet templates Requires: ☐ OpenOffice.orgThe air bubbles in the wake of the new AT&T-Time Warner merger are growing almost to dark gray. The federal government has agreed to an administrative complaint that for six months the combining of the two companies is anticompetitive, will harm consumers by raising prices and will kill the concept of choice. On the Surface: Who cares about AT&T, Time Warner and the public or the government? For one thing, AT&T is under investigation for deceptive practices. Its reporting on fourth quarter profits is questionable. It is merging with a company that markets pornography and online media to kids. The Federal Communications Commission wants to open up the broadband market to competition and to cap what are called "interstate" high speed broadband connections to no more than 10 Mbps. In the Bathwater: First, like any mergers of any companies, a few winners and many losers. The consumers have been neglected. AT&T is the largest ISP in the United States. Time Warner produces movies and other TV shows. It now owns HBO, TNT and TBS. You can rent movies and TV shows from Netflix but if you want to watch the shows online on demand, you have to go through Time Warner. "Time Warner" is the most hideous acronym in the history of communications. It sounds like an acronym for torture. I don't care how fast the broadband connections in my house are. I want to get rid of Time Warner. Next, beware of corporate attorneys or reps from the Justice Department who tell you that these mergers are "regulatory certainty" or you will lose local phone service or high speed broadband access. The Justice Department can't make telephone companies give you access to broadband, cable or internet. It can

"It's time to organize and campaign for a strong political movement that will reform the political system, transform the economy, and rein in corporate power," the report reads. The move, the report states, will involve calling on "Americans to demand a strong and just Green New Deal that enacts an economy and society in the interest of the greatest number of people, not a corporate power structure or economy." The Green New Deal, which was first endorsed by the Democratic party in October, became a rallying cry for those concerned with climate change after a "Green New Deal Resolution" was introduced by Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.) "It is well past time to break the hold that big polluters have on our government," Sanders said in a statement when the bill was introduced. "The world is running out of time, and the urgency of the climate crisis demands bold action." But the Green New Deal has faced criticism from the beginning, and according to a February
