EDIT: Man, that thing is a bomb. I can't believe it took so long... And those pesky graphics errors...

#11 Good News! Finally found time to take a good look. The original artwork is some dark purple with a small white box around a few words. I think it's supposed to say 'Discover the Magic', but it must have been a later addition. Man, that thing is a bomb. I can't believe it took so long... And those pesky graphics errors...

the constituency of Sleaford and North Hykeham that the Tories had won their deposit (which people often mean for a candidate to not have to pay a deposit in elections) on Thursday would probably backfire in Parliament. David Cameron's official spokesman confirmed that his boss knows of his comments and "is not happy". Sources said that Cameron had already warned Liddell-Grainger that he should not have made them. Earlier, Adam Drummond, a senior member of David Cameron's close team, said that it was "only right and proper that MPs take an active role" in political donations. Drummond, a member of the Cabinet Office, is the MP for Livingston and a strong supporter of the Prime Minister's Work and Pensions Commission, which he chairs. In an interview with BBC Scotland, he said: "I absolutely believe it's right and proper that MPs take an active role in political donations because there are problems at the moment with that. I think at the moment there is a disproportionate number of those going to Labour and I think it's only right and proper that MPs take an active role in that. "I'd also like to think that there will be a strengthening of the role of the Electoral Commission, which can raise money and raise concerns. I think I would be advocating that MPs take more of a role in that and I think it's right that a number of Members of Parliament take a role in that, because it's an area that can be strengthened."

The Conservatives' record on campaign donations could come under review in the next few months, after the Prime Minister last month demanded that his party's election fund be "transparent". In a televised address to party members after a disastrous set of local elections, he said: "We've got to change the
