I had a crazy week, and as a result I was not able to sort through and summarize what I have been working on. Since I have been focused on the LAMP stack for several years now, I have been working on some new Web applications and a new set of tools for the development of the back-end or “database” part of Web applications. Drupal has been keeping me occupied, but working on the backend has brought a new set of challenges, some of which are: 1. Discovering the best way to store the data. The most obvious way, is probably as MySQL in a standard database table. 2. Perfecting my migration workflow. Since the database system can be part of the creation of the application itself, and not just the Web application, I can't just copy database tables. 3. Creating API and RESTful services for the Web Applications. 4. Finding the best way to version the back-end, the application itself, and the database tables. 5. Perfecting my workflow. For example, when a Drupal website is ready to go live, what are the best and easiest ways to do that? 6. Sorting out the best way to work as a one-man crew. I also have been working on a new set of image and audio related tools called MuseBox. This is the name I have been using when I talk to developers and non-technical people about the tools, but you can refer to the product for the full info on how it works. So, I am taking a rest this week to get back to the blogging and to the admin of the active forum. Today we will focus on the back-

Table of Contents: Spoiler Review by: Deadman77 Summary: A real look at what can make a game great, and what makes it the bane of many. There are three kinds of players. Those that love to read the reviews on the internet. Those that love to read the reviews on the internet. And those that love to read the reviews on the internet, because they know that they'll find out more and more about the game as they dig deeper into it. The latter are the people that make a game great.
