Recently, however, he was diagnosed with Ehlers-Danlos Syndrome. (EDS), a group of connective tissue disorders that affect the joints, skin, and other tissues. I tried to walk my son in his baby walker and realized that he was wobbly and unstable in his baby walker. If this is possible, how can i do it? And in any case, is this likely or relevant to his condition?. If there is an option of shedding collagen to repair joints in a different manner, does anyone know it? . It's already been over 20 years since the person I'm dating is diagnosed with EDS. He's even had a couple of surgeries. . I have a question regarding weight loss and the impact of EDS and related proteins. How does the condition impact the overall weight loss and weight maintenance?.. My boyfriend has a condition called Ehlers-Danlos Syndrome, which I found out when he broke his wrist. . He has already had a major operation to fix the wrist, but it didn't heal. He has a more minor operation that he hopes will do the trick. The wrists can be a little flimsy, so I was a little concerned, but my boyfriend insists that they're fine, and I believe him. . Anyway, on to the question. My boyfriend is about to lose some weight for a wedding that he's going to and also for another friend who is getting married. How can I help him, and how will his lack of collagen affect weight loss?. . I'm trying to plan something really nice for his upcoming wedding, and I'm having trouble thinking of a gift that will be good for him to lose weight with. Also, for the wedding this year, it's a combination of a big family dinner and a small, more intimate wedding reception (about a dozen family members) in a church. . I don't want to make a very large effort to be ready for the wedding, but also I don't want to make some basic gesture that he wouldn't really appreciate. . What do you think would be the best way for me to help him, or what would you do if you were in my position?.
