In other words I want the output of for x in range(10): for y in range(10): x, y = x, y to be stored in a tuple. In the list example above that could be done with a list [x, y] but in a tuple it should be something like (x, y), right? A: Simply use a list instead of a tuple: x, y = list(zip(range(10), range(10))) print(x) # [0, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9] If you still want a tuple, you could use the * operator: x, y = tuple(zip(range(10), range(10))) This does, however, still iterate over all values of both lists, it's probably fastest to iterate over the same two lists manually: for x in range(10): for y in range(10): x, y = x, y Or use the zip() function and manually handle the outer dimensions: # or, more idiomatically, use `map(zip, zip(*[range(10)]2))` for (x, y), (z, w) in zip([map(zip, zip(*[range(10)]*2))]2): print(x, y, z, w) # (0, 1, 2, 3) (4, 5, 6, 7) (8, 9, 0, 1) (3, 4, 5, 6) (7, 8, 9, 0) (1, 2, 3, 4) (6, 7, 8, 9) A: You can do it with a list comprehension: >>> [x,y] = [(x,y) for x in range(10) for y in range(10)] >>> print([(x,y) for x

The City Council is under pressure to decide whether or not to proceed with the plans to build the new bridge over the A1 and to Smeaton until the new eight-lane motorway is completed. In a meeting on the 19th June, the Council decided that it would not go ahead with the new Smeaton to Glasgow Gateway Bridge until the Government gives its 'consent'. The Scottish Government said it would consider the decision and publish its response in a formal consultation process in October 2016. The Council says the response may influence its decision and may even result in the proposal being withdrawn altogether. Before the Council's decision it is believed that two members of the Council agreed that the proposal should go ahead, one member abstained, and one member was absent. The reasons for the abstention have not yet been publicly revealed but the operator of the Foxmead retail park has confirmed that there will be no expansion of the site until the new Gateway Bridge is built. The only alternative to the Gateway Bridge is to upgrade the existing Hadrian's Wall Road Bridge.3-Aminobenzoic acid: a ligand for the isolation of meroterpenoid natural products.
