By use of a specific ureteral catheter the intravesical pressure was increased by inflating the balloon. This was carried out in a) volume-controlled mode (up to 250 ml) with a constant rate of flow-inflation (20 ml/min) and b) pressure-controlled mode (up to 10 mmHg). Contrary to the common hypothesis of a reflex-like mechanism a "pressure-response" was observed: By increasing pressure within the vesical lumen the intravesical pressure decreased. This effect was more pronounced the longer the balloon was in situ. It was not influenced by volume-inflation. The mechanism of action of the ureteral balloon catheter has to be discussed. The preliminary data however suggest the possibility of its therapeutical application. Whirlpool (City in Bloom) Bags of flowers are left in Whirlpool Park as part of the City in Bloom competition.
