To start a new file, choose File⇒New. At the bottom of the Get Started dialog box, you have three options: Image/Camera: This is the default option. You see the main window of your choice, a preview of your image, and a cursor with a box indicating the rectangular selection area. If you select one of the tool options that appear, the cursor and selection window change to match. Photo: If you see the window that looks like a camera in the Get Started dialog box, select the Photo option. A menu bar across the top of the window displays the original and the preview image, with the vertical tool bar on the left showing the tools available for editing. The menus appear at the bottom of the window. The image on the right side of the window is the active photo image and may or may not be the same as the photo that you will be working on. New: This is the most flexible option. When you click this option, the New dialog box opens where you can select your image and enter new information. See the "Adding a new document" sidebar earlier in this chapter for the details. Figure 2-1 shows the Photoshop Get Started window. **Figure 2-1:** The default image in a new Photoshop file. An increasing number of therapies that treat, prevent or detect diseases are based on disease-specific biomarkers such as single proteins, nucleic acids, antibodies, carbohydrates, lipids and small organic molecules. Biomarker-based therapies are moving towards being used in population screening, screening of all asymptomatic individuals, prevention, primary treatment, secondary treatment (including the optimal time of treatment), and surveillance. In addition, biomarkers are used as surrogate endpoints to evaluate intermediate and efficacy endpoints. Despite progress made over the last decade, the development of an effective diagnostic for early detection of cancer diseases is still a big challenge. Detection of biomarkers for early stage cancer is limited by the fact that patients do not present symptoms until all or most of the cancer cells have been formed. During the initial growth and dissemination of a cancer cell, the levels of biomarkers are usually very low, and increases in the biomarker levels, measured by immunoassay, is a key indicator for cancer development. However, for biomarkers to be useful for screening, a simple, inexpensive assay is needed that can be readily performed in the doctor's office, in the hospital laboratory, or in a non-laboratory settings such as the home or community, as well as detect early stage cancer. The assay should provide a positive and negative result at concentrations low enough to be detected by sampling devices that collect patient samples such as, for example, cotton swabs or brushes. Therefore, there is a need in the art for diagnostic assays that are rapid and simple, provide a positive and negative result that detects cancer development, as well as have a high sensitivity. The present invention addresses this need.

Launched in the UK in 1999, The CW's current series Supernatural is a story of God's plan for Dean, Castiel and Sam Winchester. The series has had its ups and downs, but it's probably safe to say that the whole family has always ended up being great. It has been rumored that Andrew Dabb, writer and executive producer for the series, would be leaving as of this March, he confirmed to a fan on Twitter that it is true. He also said that the new showrunner would be taking over for him, whoever that person is, without saying who would be taking that role. Andrew Dabb is writing and executive producing @superengaged, so I guess we will be done in 3 months. But the new showrunner will be taking over
