For example, a 'Car' model has a 'color' attribute of the model it is called on 'Car'. I would like to get all the Cars that has a specific color. Please help. A: Use the model's constructor to set up a getter function: $colorAttribute; } } Then, in your controller or any other model: $cars = Car::where('color', 'blue'); Now you have the selected set of cars, all you have to do is iterate through them and do whatever you need to do. A: Basically you've got 2 ways of doing that: If you're constructing it in the Car model, you just need to use a public function in Car like this: $colorAttribute; } } And then in your controller: $cars = Car::where('color', 'blue')->get(); or $color = Car::find(1)->color; If you're planning to do it later, it would be better to create an accessor in your model: $colorAttribute; } //Called within your model for setting the color property public function setColorAttribute($val) {
