Marketing Management " Class 12.Cisco's CEO: We're back to focusing on reality Cisco CEO John Chambers hopes for more realism from his company as it moves forward. Cisco CEO John Chambers said recently that his company is still out to expand its user base as much as it is to expand its market share. But he said it is time for Cisco to drop the hyperbole and get back to providing reality in the world of communications networks. "We must get back to reality and focus on the 80 percent that really counts: the business opportunity," Chambers said in an interview at the recent Wall Street Journal Computer Electronics Conference, held in Las Vegas. He said that actually helping businesses, and connecting them better, is a higher priority. "That's about what counts," he said. "That's where I'm focused." Chambers said he believes Cisco has plenty of consumer, enterprise and carrier revenue left to catch up with its main rival, Alcatel-Lucent, which recently finished a $11 billion upgrade of its network equipment. Cisco has gone through seven CEOs in the last three years, Chambers added, and the company has also had up to ten divisions. "Can you imagine what we could have done if we stopped doing that?" Chambers said, referring to his company's past strategy of having up to 10 or more different product groups. Chambers cited Cisco's move to a single $6 billion unit for software and services revenue in the fourth quarter, as well as the consolidation of the company's
