1. Click the New Layer icon (it looks like a plus sign or a lightbulb) to create a new layer. Photoshop automatically imports the image from the open file. You can also import an image from your hard drive, insert an image using the built-in Photo Browser, or copy an image from another application. Just make sure that the image you import is in a compatible file format. If you want to work with multiple images at one time, use the Layered Imports option (the second option down in the toolbox options in the Layers panel, as shown in Figure 11-1). This method displays all the images that are open in the file browser and lets you drag one or more files into the image window. 2. Click in the image window (the area that contains the file name, file size, and a preview of the image) and drag the file or the selection tool over one or more images that are open. Photoshop imports each file into a separate layer. You can have four layers in your image or even more if you add more image files to the Layered Imports window. You can use the layer visibility options to hide some layers and reveal others. Visible layers show what's underneath them and are selectable. Hidden layers show nothing underneath them but can still be selectable and can be added to a selection. You may choose the check box to show, hide, or toggle visibility (perform a visible or hidden toggle) by highlighting the check box for visibility and clicking the selection tool's Visibility button. To load a file into a new document and not import it, click the New Document icon (a plus sign) in the Editor toolbar. FIGURE 11-1: Drag one or more images into the image window or into the Layered Imports window. You can create a selection or move an existing selection over an area of an image that you want to copy or add to a new layer. Creating a selection may take a little practice, so don't fret if you want to grab a couple of images and add them as layers. 3. Click the Selection tool icon in the toolbar. The selection handles appear. The selection handles appear as wavy lines. Drag one of the handles in the direction you want to drag the image. You can also zoom in or out and press the Shift key to isolate a portion of the

This article is going to give you an overview of some of the features of Photoshop Elements (in order of their appearance on the home screen). Features: Edit existing images. Create new images using layers, either by clicking on the New Layer button or using keyboard shortcuts. Increase or reduce the size of an image. Adjust the brightness, contrast, and color of the image. Sharpen an image. Add custom effects to an image. Change the transparency and fill of an image. Adjust color in an image. Adjust color of a selected color in an image. Create new backgrounds (one of the image layers). Save the image using the JPEG, GIF, or PNG format. Add borders to an image. Reduce the size of the image (while maintaining its quality). Sharpen an image. Rotate the image, either 90, 180 or 270 degrees. Adjust color in an image. Add a watermark to an image. Add a logo to the image. Adjust the opacity of the image. Manage the content of images in a file. Customize the look and feel of interface elements (check out the app bar). The images will be displayed in the correct arrangement on the home screen. Although we will cover many of the features of Photoshop Elements, there are a few features in this list that are only available in Photoshop or Photoshop Elements. These are the features that are commonly found in both Photoshop and Photoshop Elements: Change the color of a selected color (Free Transform, Match Color, and Gradient Editor) Add custom effects to an image (the Effect Editor) Crop an image (Crop) Edit existing images. Create new images using layers (Choose Layers, Click on New Layer, or use the keyboard shortcuts) Increase or reduce the size of an image (Zoom) Adjust the brightness, contrast, and color of the image (Adjustment Layers) Sharpen an image (Adjust Sharpness) Add custom effects to an image (the Effect Editor) Crop an image (Crop) Adjust color in an image (Adjust Color) Add borders to an image (Artistic Borders) Reduce the size of the image (while maintaining its quality) 05a79cecff

Chrome: If you wish to see the most used browser by users on Chrome when you're browsing in Chrome, you can enable it via Chrome Custom Tabs. Follow the instructions below to begin viewing how many of your users are using a particular browser and to see Chrome Custom Tabs under the More tab. If you are not a Chrome user, or are not sure how to set it up, you can set Chrome as your default browser by first signing into Google and then going to Tools > Options and choosing the "Use Google Chrome as your default browser" option.Consumption of products protected by the EU RoHS Directive. A study on the behavior of consumers towards the RoHS Directive was carried out in order to assess the implementation of the legislation at the level of the consumer's choice of brands. The study focused on the most popular Spanish brands and the correlation between their market shares and their compliance with the RoHS Directive. The results showed that the most popular brands were produced by the lowest number of manufacturers, and among those brands the average compliance with the RoHS Directive was the lowest.Q: How to sort a list of strings keeping their elements in order, without changing their string representation I want a function/list/other to remove items from a list while keep the order they were originally in the list. For example: input_list: ["aaaaa", "bbbbb", "ccccc", "ddddd", "eee", "ff", "gg", "hh", "ii", "jjjjj"] output_list: ["aa", "bbb", "cc", "dddd", "ee", "ff", "gg", "hh", "ii", "jj", "jjjj"] I guess my question is similar to the question How to remove an element from a list without changing its order?, but the answerer has not made any code example, so I don't have an idea how the answer is working. A: You can use nested list comprehension. I just borrowed an idea from @user1234's answer as well. def sort_or_remove(lst): # an empty list which stores a permutation of lst lst_perm = [lst] # loop over

There are a number of previous inventions and disclosures of structures for generating arcing corona discharge from a conductive web. Two such structures are shown in U.S. Pat. No. 4,432,352 to Hsien Yang, and in U.S. Pat. No. 5,258,296 to Phil P. Forsin, et al. The first device utilizes a conductive roller with its surface covered by a dielectric layer. A grounded pin contacts the roller and arcs during startup. As the web passes between it and the roller, corona discharge from the roller surface creates a charged, or corona, layer on the web. The charged layer attracts particles from the web surface, resulting in an image on the web. The second structure includes a conductive roller coated with a dielectric layer. A steel roller is initially charged by a flat plate arrangement. The charge is discharged by applying an AC voltage at the roller. A web, which may be paper, having a white surface is then passed between the roller and the charging structure. The charged roller attracts charged particles from the web's surface, resulting in an image on the web. To produce a color image on the web, a multi-colored fluorescent lamp is passed at the roller to produce arc discharges of the appropriate colors. This device is described in U.S. Pat. No. 5,258,296. An alternative printer described in U.S. Pat. No. 5,206,499 to Scott E. Purdy utilizes a roller coated with a dielectric material. Three motors each having a respective shaft and motor windings are connected to the roller. One motor has one winding. Another has two windings. The third motor has three windings. As the web passes between the rollers and the respective windings, a corona discharge is generated in the space between the rollers. The corona discharge is generated from the different amounts of electrical charge carried by the differing number of winds of each motor. The patent teaches that three colors of fluorescent tubes may be connected to the windings, in sequence, to produce an image on the web. In U.S. Pat. No. 5,259,488 to R. Philip Hunsaker, et al., the conductive roller is coated with a dielectric material and three pairs of conductive shoes, each pair having an associated plate, are disposed above and below the roller. AC voltage is applied to the first plate of each pair
