Load the necessary setup files for GSA.Q: Replace by using the function of map I have a function that return map which has a field for each node, and each field contain string. nodes.map(node => { node.id node.Title node.Text node.Tags }); I need to replace the string in the field using a function. For example, replace the string in the field with the function, foo = function(a){ return a + "foo"; } How I can replace the string in each field. For example, the result should be like this: nodes.map(node => { foo(node.id); foo(node.Title); foo(node.Text); foo(node.Tags); }); A: You could use some, but it doesn't seem that node.foo does not exist. The trick is to iterate through the nodes and create new objects. nodes.map(node => ({ id: foo(node.id), title: foo(node.title), text: foo(node.text), tags: foo(node.tags) })); The overall goal of this research proposal is to determine the role of the inhibitory neurotransmitter GABA in modulating normal and pathologic prostatic function and to gain insight into the pharmacologic modulation of prostatic function. The synthesis, localization, function, and pharmacology of GABA receptors in the rat ventral and dorsolateral prostate are being studied using the radioligand [35S]TBPS as a probe for GABA receptors. Flavivirus, the agent of yellow fever, dengue, Japanese encephalitis and tick-borne encephalitis, are important human pathogens transmitted to man by mosquito and tick bites. Many flaviviruses are associated with mosquito transmission, are highly contagious and several are potential bioterrorism agents. Flaviviruses assemble into spherical particles containing the major envelope glycoprotein, E, organized into 60-70 trimers of which each E monomer comprises approximately 1000 amino acids. In addition, two capsid proteins, C and M, are present in the mature virion. The C protein is a phosphoprotein of 226 amino acids (aa) in length, and has a domain that is required for membrane binding, two hydrophobic transmembrane segments and a short cytoplasmic tail. The M protein is the most highly conserved of all flavivirus proteins (50% aa identity) and varies in length from 621 (West Nile virus, WNV) to 688 aa (tick-borne encephalitis virus, TBEV). The precise functions of the structural proteins of flaviviruses are only partially known, and structural details at the molecular level are still lacking. Here, we discuss recent studies that have provided insights into the three-dimensional arrangement of E and the roles of the structural proteins in the assembly and morphogenesis of the virions. A model of a mature flavivirus particle is presented. Follow Sunlight, Not Farts - smirking ===== smirking Here is a link to the
