The Open Library is a Web-based application that lets users access and search digitized books from public libraries in the United States and other countries. To make the Open Library easier to use, it was built in collaboration with libraries, librarians and academic libraries from around the world. Open Library allows the user to gain free access to many e-books from thousands of libraries in the United States and abroad. Open Library is available through the Web and it can be used directly from any computer with an Internet connection. The application also allows users to upload their own book collections for public access.

Description: This is an OAI-PMH (Open Archives Initiative Protocol for Metadata Harvesting) compliant catalog of paper by author, title, and subject records. The data was extracted from various sources, including the catalogs of the Abington College Library and the J.F. White Library at Southampton College, and from the current inventory of the Lambton College Library. The data set was built in the early 1980's, when data mining was done manually, and are some of the earliest data mined from universities' libraries. The data set has grown as curators have added more records, and now numbers nearly 800,000 records in over 70,000 recordsets. For more information about the paper collection, see the papers page. The collection is available at the following URL: Collation/Working Group: This group has become defunct. This data set is not archived at the Open Archives Initiative (OAI-PMH); its current status and future direction will be handled by the OAI-PMH Extension for Library Collections Working Group. The contact information will remain as shown here. Located within the University of Texas at Austin in the Dolph Briscoe Center for American History, the AHC holds more than 130,000 volumes. The AHC (formerly known as the A.C. Martin Department of History and Archaeology) was established in 1930. Since that time the AHC has progressed in both stature and academic reach. The University of Texas has become the leading southern university of its size, and several subordinate colleges have blossomed with the University's success. The AHC has a unique collection of materials on the history of the Southwest.
